Excerpt from The Latter-Day Saints Millennial Star, Vol. 89: February 24, 1927 However, after all such adjustments had been made, the battery was still unsatisfactory. Its operation was weak, irregular, uncertain, and wholly unsuited to the electrolysis required by the work in progress. At length, having become convinced that the fault was a radical one, that some defect was present which no ordinary patching-up process would remedy, the man of science took the battery apart and subjected each cell to an individual examination. One after another passed the test and proved itself to be in measurably perfect condition, until eight had been thus disposed of; the ninth was seriously at fault. That cell was set aside, and the remaining three were tested; all of these were good. Plainly, then, the inefficiency of the battery was chargeable to that one unit, number nine; and this one had been among the worst of the abnormally active cells. The eleven good units were connected up; and from the battery thus assembled there issued a current fairly adequate for the work in...
